AESTHETIC CLINIC

Hand protection
Hand protection is used in aesthetic practice. Irritated, abraded and cracked skin can offer a portal of entry for micro-organisms.
Good quality non-sterile medical gloves, worn for all clinical procedures and changed when they are soiled or after each patient. The gloves must be well fitting and non-powdered. The powder-free gloves can contain latex proteins and residual monomers. These are common allergens. Hypoallergenic and 'low protein' gloves should be sought. If contact dermatitis is suspected, the advice of a dermatologist should be sought. If contact dermatitis is suspected, the advice of a dermatologist should be sought. If contact dermatitis is suspected, the advice of a dermatologist should be sought.
Hand washing
Hand washing is the 'spelling' of the 'patient - doctor - assistant'. The dental personnel is obliged to wash their hands before and after coming in contact with the patient. Hand washing must be performed meticulously so that every hand surface is adequately cleaned. The pictures illustrate the areas requiring special attention so that hands are properly cleaned.
